The screenshot shows the top navigation bar of the BMJ Best Practice website. The navigation items are: What's new, Specialties, Calculators, Patient information, Multimedia, About us, and Your profile. The 'Your profile' dropdown menu is open, showing the following options: Access provided by: SACYL; Logged in as: mdiazru@saludcastillayleon.es; Your extra features: Case reports, Comorbidities Manager, Drug information, Evidence resources; Download the app; Account details: My account, Sign up for email updates; Claim your CME/CPD credits; and Log out. A red arrow points from the main text area to the 'Logged in as' field. Below the navigation bar, there is a main content area with a headline: 'Ranked one of the best clinical decision support tools for health professionals worldwide, BMJ Best Practice provides step-by-step guidance on diagnosis, treatment and prevention.' Below this is a sub-headline: 'Updated daily using robust evidence-based methodology and expert opinion, BMJ Best Practice provides you with access to the very latest clinical information.' To the left of the main content area is a 'Important updates' section with two items: '30 Jan 2026 Tapeworm infection' and '28 Jan 2026 Hepatitis B'. To the right of the main content area is a 'New' section with a date '30 Jan 2026' and a headline: 'Antiparasitic monotherapy recommended as first-line treatment option for select cases of cystic echinococcosis'. Below this headline is a short paragraph: 'The World Health Organization (WHO) has published a new evidence-based guideline on the management of cystic echinococcosis. The purpose of the guideline is to provide guidance on the choice of treatment so that patients have access to affordable, and equitable treatment in the context of their local health systems.'
